GEORGE WASHINGTON GIVES 11 DEGREES

Two Graduates at Winter Convocation Are Residents of Washington.

Eleven students of George Washington University, two of whom are Washingtonians, received degrees at the winter convocation of that institution today in the assembly hall of the department of arts and sciences.

Dr. Charles Downer Hazen, formerly professor of history at Smith College, now a resident of Washington, spoke on "Patriotism and Perspective." He pointed out the opportunities for a display of patriotism in the paths of peace, as well as upon the fields of battle.

At the conclusion of the address, Rear Admiral Charles Herbert Stockton, retired, president of the university, briefly admonished the graduates to take up promptly and ever realize their duties of citizenship.

From the Law School Dean Everett Fraser presented for the degree of bachelor of laws Harry S. Elkins, South Dakota; William Reed Fitch, North Dakota; Frederick D. Fletcher, Washington; and John W. Vawter, Utah.

Robert Mathias Zacharias, of Pennsylvania, received the degree of master of laws.

Two degrees were given in the graduate school, Dean Charles Edward Monroe presenting Francis Edward Carter, of Virginia, for the degree of arts, and Maurice Crowther Hall, of this city, for the degree of doctor of philosophy.

The exercises were opened with the overture from "Carmen," and concluded with Schubert's "Erlkönig" Suite. The Rev. John MacMurray delivered a prayer and pronounced the benediction.

PHOTOPLAYS AND PHOTOPLAYERS

FRANCIS BUSHMAN and BEVERLY BAYNE, in "The Accounting" at the Leader today.

Belasco Hails Film As New Means For Expression Of Art Ideas

The value of the motion picture through the fact that it offers a new means of attitudinal and circulatory ideas is becoming generally recognized nowadays. It is this feature of the photoplay which is appealing to the artistic producers of stage spectacles.

The dean of American producers and the master craftsman of the scenic spectacle, David Belasco, has given the film play his unqualified endorsement in this respect. The fact that Mr. Belasco has permitted his plays to be produced for the screen is evidence of this.

Of course, one of the reasons the Belasco plays were released for film production is that Mr. Belasco wished them to be given a careful scrutiny under his supervision. He realized that if he did not release them that some unscrupulous film man would build photoplays around the Belasco ideas and give them poor production. But he really wanted to see the plays on the screen.

In an interview which Mr. Belasco has given the representative of the Dramatic Mirror, the great producer discusses these ideas at length.

"It is needless to say that I would not jeopardize the past great reputation of these dramatic properties for the sake of money, the one thing that I have always put under the artistic side of the drama," says Mr. Belasco. "If I did not believe in the possibilities of the medium through which they were going to be shown to the public view in another form."

"But I did not appreciate the great progress that has been made in the motion picture art."

"I have not only been satisfied with the presentation of The Rose of the Rancho, 'The Girl of the Golden West,' and 'The Warrens of Virginia,' but I have been absolutely delighted with these pictures."

With all the world for a stage and all the vastness of the screen, Mr. Belasco has been able to show most wonderfully, not only the scenes in these dramas which were enacted on the stage, but those other and almost equally important episodes which, because of the limitations of the theater as against the fields of nature, could not be used in the stage versions.

"The photoplay is important not only as a means of producing and presenting original ideas, but also as a means of making the inducement for dramatic authorship even greater than heretofore."

"Until recently all of the possible variations to be played upon a successful original idea, but also as a means of making the inducement for dramatic authorship even greater than heretofore."

"The photoplay is important not only as a means of producing and presenting original ideas, but also as a means of making the inducement for dramatic authorship even greater than heretofore."
